I experience a sense of collaboration with the ideas, materials, and energies I work with. (By “energies” I mean things like colours, light, mood, atmosphere.) A sense of play and intuition are paramount, but also a strong discernment. (is this working? how? how not?) I mostly work with a rich but soft colour palette, contemporary/abstract forms and a range of found objects and recycled materials.

Art is about expressive intent, so when at the pottery wheel I feel that part of me is imbedded into the piece. Whether it is a single piece or a repeat form it still carries it. A lot of my work is functional art and so typically has a use. Glazing and firing are a whole big can of worms, as in the kiln it is all great and bad at the same time. The satisfaction of the work as it is finished is enormous.
